

Principles of Environmental and Recycling Efforts

As a responsible and concerned member of the city of Denver and the State of Colorado, National Jewish Health realizes its obligation to protect and preserve the environment. National Jewish Health will protect the environment by promoting cost-effective business practices consistent with the following principles:

- To meet or exceed all environmental laws and regulations.
- To support and encourage recycling of the materials used within the hospital.
- To minimize waste and ensure that contaminated waste is disposed of in a safe and responsible manner.
- To seek, evaluate and implement methodologies that limit the use of non-renewable resources.
- To eliminate emissions of toxic or dangerous substance into air, water, or earth.
- To encourage the use of alternative transportation.
- To pursue conservation of water resources and energy efficiency.
