At National Jewish Health, we have thought long and deeply about breathing. Since we opened our doors 118 years ago, our physicians and researchers have intensively focused on breathing — how the lungs function best, how they are compromised by disease, and how we can help people breathe better. We are a science-based organization, which is the foundation for our understanding of the lungs and breathing. Therefore, we perform a great deal of cutting-edge research to better understand and treat respiratory and related diseases. Life is what all our efforts are about; helping people breathe better so they can live longer, healthier, happier lives. So, it is only fitting that we titled this year’s annual report with our new brand promise — Breathing Science is Life®.

In the Breathing section of the report, patient Nancy Deans will give you a sense of how terrifying and debilitating it can be when you can’t breathe, and how extraordinary it is when you can breathe again. You will learn how our experts in the Pulmonary Physiology Unit use sophisticated, state-of-the-art tools and tests to discover exactly how air is — or is not — flowing in and out of the lungs. The article “A Personal Sense of Urgency” explains how sleep and breathing are intimately connected, and how a novel video can make a difference.

The Science section of the report explains how advanced genetic studies and precision medicine for respiratory and related diseases are delivering vital answers to our patients and how cutting-edge research is helping us better understand and promote healing in damaged lungs. In the Life section, we look beyond the walls of our hospital to show how our work helps people live fuller lives, from a teen pursuing his passion for dancing, to Navajo children struggling with an asthma epidemic, to workers exposed to the toxic metal beryllium.

In the Collaborations section of our annual report, we detail how our work with leading health care institutions is raising the level of respiratory care and research across the nation, which is core to our mission. Among other highlights, you can read about our newest collaboration with Jefferson Health on the Jane and Leonard Korman Jefferson Health | National Jewish Health Respiratory Institute in Philadelphia. In the second half of the book, we recognize and celebrate the many generous donors who make our work possible. Among them, we highlight John and Carrie Morgridge and the Morgridge Family Foundation, who have helped us in so many ways that we presented them with the Arthur B. Lorber Award, the highest honor at National Jewish Health.

After reading through these stories in our annual report, we hope you will better understand why we at National Jewish Health believe that Breathing Science is Life®.
It’s easy to take breathing for granted, until you can’t…

At National Jewish Health, our experts study the whole person: the lungs, the heart, the digestive system and anything else that can help us help you breathe better.

We breathe science, so you can breathe life.
We look deeper and investigate further to restore a person’s ability to breathe well.

Don Rollins, MD
Professor of Medicine

When breathing difficulties forced Nancy Deans to her knees, she had to give up her passion, barrel racing. Pulmonologist Don Rollins, MD, and his colleagues got Nancy back in the saddle.
A nurse once told Nancy Deans she had never seen a patient who breathed so shallowly. Nancy knew that if she breathed very lightly, kept calm and did not exert herself suddenly, she would be all right. But life does not always work that way. In 2015, while bathing her horse Fury in preparation for a barrel racing competition, Nancy Deans suffered another shortness-of-breath episode. In an instant, she was on her hands and knees, unable to talk, gasping for breath.

“You just lose your air,” said Deans, 58, of Montrose, Colorado.

Breathing problems had plagued Deans for nearly a decade. She had surgery to remove a blockage in her airway, which offered some relief. But the breathing problems always returned, and no one could tell her the cause. Finally, she realized that she could not compete in barrel racing, the sport she loves. “I just couldn’t do it anymore. I couldn’t risk passing out on that horse.”

Fortunately, one of her fellow barrel racers recommended that she come to National Jewish Health, where she saw senior pulmonologist Don Rollins, MD. After extensive testing and comprehensive evaluation at National Jewish Health, Dr. Rollins came into the examination room with a diagnosis.

“Congratulations, you have asthma,” said Dr. Rollins. Finally, it had a name, and he could treat it,” said Deans.

The comprehensive testing also revealed that Deans’ asthma was complicated by sleep apnea and vocal cord dysfunction. The blockage in her airway also had grown back.

“The majority of our patients have multiple issues that restrict their breathing,” said Dr. Rollins. “That’s why we look deeper and investigate further to restore a person’s ability to breathe well.”

In a highly specialized procedure, interventional pulmonologist Kendra Hammond, MD, removed the airway obstruction and cauterized it, so that it is unlikely to return anytime soon. Dr. Rollins prescribed medications for asthma and a continuous positive airway pressure (CPAP) machine for her sleep apnea. Speech therapist Kristina Johnston taught Deans exercises to control the vocal cord dysfunction. Dr. Rollins continues to see Deans regularly to monitor her ongoing health.

Two years later, Deans is breathing easier and has resumed strenuous barrel racing. “My breathing ... It’s like night and day,” said Deans. “I am 100 percent better. I can breathe again.”
When patients first come to National Jewish Health, most have a simple question: “Why can’t I breathe?”

Is air trapped deep in the lungs by constricted airways, a hallmark of asthma and COPD? Does the air flow well, but fail to diffuse into the bloodstream because of extensive scarring? Or does the shortness of breath originate in the heart rather than the lungs?

The Pulmonary Physiology Unit (PPU) at National Jewish Health helps supply the answers. The largest, most advanced pulmonary physiology unit in the world, the PPU features 27 procedure rooms and offices filled with advanced equipment, some appearing to have come from a Hollywood science-fiction film. A room-sized metal and plastic box houses the exposure chamber, where patients’ breathing is monitored after exposure to various irritants, from ammonia in cleaning products to cigarette smoke, perfume or even steam rising from a boiling pot of shrimp. In another room, patients wearing full face masks ride bikes as hard as they can while arterial lines draw blood samples. Other tests simulate high altitude or extremely cold temperatures.

“CT scans, MRIs and X-rays can show you the structure of the lung,” said George Zeman, RRT, CPFT, BS, director of pulmonary physiology and cardiology services at National Jewish Health. “Pulmonary physiology tests show how the lungs function, how air flows through the airways and how oxygen diffuses into the bloodstream. At National Jewish Health, we are always looking for new ways to understand how the lungs function.”

For example, pediatric pulmonologist Tod Olin, MD, MSCS, threads a thin tube with a tiny camera, called a laryngoscope, through a patient’s nose and down the throat. He then watches as the patient pedals a stationary bicycle as hard as possible to see if the vocal cords close and block airflow during extreme exertion. Pulmonologist Silpa Krefft, MD, MPH, recently reported that cardiopulmonary exercise tests may help determine what is causing breathing difficulties among warfighters returning from the Middle East.

“To help patients breathe better, we need to know where the problems are,” said Amy Olson, MD, MPH, medical director of the pulmonary physiology unit. “Pulmonary physiology testing helps us do that.”
Occupational pulmonologist Silpa Krefft, MD, leads Thomas Engel, a former steelworker from Indiana, through specialized tests to discover what is blocking the smooth flow of air through his lungs.
Michael Berry is a big, strong guy. But the truck driver from Denver was always tired. If he sat down for even a few minutes, he fell asleep.

At National Jewish Health, he received a diagnosis of sleep apnea, repeated closure of the upper airways during sleep, which disrupts sleep and leaves patients tired and unrefreshed in the morning. Left untreated, sleep apnea has been linked to serious medical conditions, including depression, diabetes, heart disease and cancer, as well as to accidents such as car wrecks.

Doctors prescribe a continuous positive airway pressure (CPAP) machine for treatment. It delivers air under pressure through a face mask to keep the throat open while sleeping. Unfortunately, patients often dislike the mask, tubing and machine noise of CPAP, prompting more than half of patients to quit using them.

National Jewish Health sleep expert Mark Aloia, PhD, has latched on to a central fact of sleep apnea to motivate patients to use their CPAP machines, sleep better and function more effectively. Almost by definition, sleep apnea patients are sleeping and unaware...
Understanding the Heart and Lungs as One

Perhaps no other disease better illustrates the critical connection between the heart and lungs than pulmonary hypertension, a type of high blood pressure involving the arteries of the lungs and the right side of the heart. To understand, diagnose and treat pulmonary hypertension, physicians must address issues in both the heart and the lungs.

The National Jewish Health Division of Cardiology has long specialized in diagnosing and treating pulmonary hypertension. In 2016, M. Patricia “Patty” George, MD, a pulmonologist nationally recognized for her expertise in pulmonary hypertension, joined the National Jewish Health team. Together, Dr. George and cardiologist Kern Buckner, MD, are leading an expanded pulmonary hypertension program.

One of the first new initiatives will be invasive cardiopulmonary exercise testing (iCPET), which uses a cardiac catheter to monitor blood pressure within the heart while a patient exercises. That test, available at only a handful of institutions across the nation, will allow a better diagnosis and management of patients with pulmonary hypertension.

“We look at the heart and lungs as one unit,” said Dr. Buckner. “By combining Dr. George’s pulmonary perspective with our expertise in the right side of the heart, we are going to make great advances in helping patients with pulmonary hypertension.”

as they snore, gasp, fight to breathe and wake repeatedly. Dr. Aloia thought he might motivate patients to use their CPAP machines by showing them videos of themselves sleeping. The effect was dramatic.

“We really created a personal sense of urgency in these patients in order to change their behavior,” said Dr. Aloia. “Patients actually got very emotional. Sometimes we’d have men who had never really thought of themselves having a problem being tearful.”

Sleep apnea patients who watched their own struggles with sleep apnea used their CPAP machines three hours more per night than those who saw no video, and nearly two and a half hours more than those who watched a video of another patient with sleep apnea.

“It was a real eye-opener watching myself fighting for breath,” said Michael Berry. “Waking up the next morning and having no knowledge of it was scary.” Since seeing the video of himself, Berry has worn his CPAP machine every night. He feels less tired, more alert and no longer needs to nap during the day.
Scientific research forms the critical foundation of our efforts to prevent, treat and cure multiple diseases. Just as past discoveries have led to revolutionary treatments for allergies, asthma and cancer, our current research seeks solutions that will heal lungs, treat autoimmune disease and prevent allergies.

We breathe science, so you can breathe life.
National Jewish Health researchers discovered a single mutation in one of Bentley Livingston’s genes that predisposes him to severe allergies, and have proposed a clinical trial to address it.
Anna Bartels had exhausted her options by the time she brought her 4-year-old son, Bentley Livingston, from Gaston, South Carolina, to National Jewish Health in 2015. Bentley suffers from severe eczema and food allergies that are so intense that he must be fed through a tube.

“I had been to numerous doctors,” Anna said. “They would just treat his skin, or they would just treat his stomach. Nobody ever put all this together until we went to National Jewish Health.”

As part of the comprehensive evaluation at National Jewish Health, Erwin Gelfand, MD; Pia Hauk, MD; and Paul Reynolds, PhD, sequenced several hundred of Bentley’s genes involved in the immune response. They discovered a mutation in one gene, CARD11, which prevents the natural amino acid glutamine from getting into cells. The mutation has profound effects on immune regulation and predisposes patients to allergy.

Since the discovery of Bentley’s mutation, Dr. Gelfand and colleagues discovered a genetic mutation that made another patient susceptible to rhinovirus infections, which cause the common cold. As part of the State of Colorado Newborn Screening program, Dr. Gelfand, Dr. Reynolds and Dr. Abbott also have identified several mutations that cause severe combined immune deficiency disease, often labelled “bubble-baby syndrome.”

“Advances in gene sequencing technology have allowed us to look more closely at potential genetic roots of immune dysfunction in children and adults,” said Dr. Gelfand. “We are finding many disorders caused by mutations in single genes.”

These discoveries are providing answers for increasing numbers of people with immune disorders. Identifying the single genetic mutation that causes severe allergies or a weakened immune system suggests a precise strategy to treat it. The National Jewish Health team is now evaluating a simple amino acid supplement to treat Bentley Livingston’s severe eczema and food allergy.
Research teams at National Jewish Health are seeking to understand how lungs repair themselves and discover how to promote the process in humans with lung disease.
The lung is an amazingly resilient organ. Assaulted on a daily basis by a constant influx of dust, microorganisms and industrial pollutants, the lung manages to protect and repair itself again and again. Until it doesn’t. In some people, the natural repair process fails, leading to tissue destruction, runaway scarring or other irreparable damage. Once the damage occurs, there is little that can be done to repair the lung. Currently, there are no approved treatments to enhance lung repair.

Scientists at National Jewish Health are working hard to understand how the lung repairs itself. They hope to transform those discoveries into treatments that repair lungs so patients can breathe freely.

Promoting Inflammation to Halt Scarring

Scarring is a normal part of healing; the stiff mix of collagen and other materials in scar tissue holds damaged tissue together while new tissue regrows. Once tissue is repaired, the scar tissue melts away. In pulmonary fibrosis and other scarring diseases, however, the healing process goes awry, and scarring continues unabated. Inflammation was long thought to contribute to excess scarring. However, Assistant Professor of Cell Biology, Elizabeth Redente, PhD, has shown that the inflammatory molecule TNF-α can get the healing process back on track, stop the scarring and melt away scar tissue. She is now seeking to understand the specific mechanisms and signals that TNF-α triggers to turn off scarring.

Orchestrating Lung Repair

Associate Professor of Medicine William Janssen, MD, has identified a new subset of cells that migrate to injured lung tissue and mature into macrophages that are key drivers of lung repair. He is seeking to confirm findings that these macrophages use an alternative energy system that allows them to thrive in damaged, oxygen-poor tissue and to secrete molecules that promote repair of injured tissue. He also is testing the hypothesis that a molecule known as HIF-1α, drives the development of those macrophages into critical orchestrators of lung repair.

Revitalizing Stem Cells

Stem cells are fundamental to tissue repair. The ability of these cells to clone themselves repeatedly and differentiate into a variety of cell types allows them to replace damaged tissue. Cigarette smoke inhibits stem cells in bone marrow, a major source of new cells for the circulatory and immune systems. Irina Petrache, MD, head of the Pulmonary Division at National Jewish Health, has discovered that liposuction may provide an avenue to revitalize bone marrow stem cells and promote lung repair. Fat sucked out of people undergoing liposuction contains a few stem cells. When those fat-derived stem cells are injected into mice, they produce growth and reparative factors that restore the health and regenerative capacity of bone marrow stem cells, which can promote lung repair.

Transplanting Stem Cells

Assistant Professor of Medicine Moumita Ghosh, PhD, is pursuing a different approach to repairing damaged lungs: cell-based therapy. Dr. Ghosh discovered and isolated extremely rare stem cells in human airways. She recently developed complex protocols to successfully transplant those stem cells. After transplantation, the stem cells multiplied and differentiated into the various cell types found in a functional airway. She is now studying whether stem cell-based therapy could be a viable treatment option for repairing lungs of patients with chronic diseases such as COPD or lung cancer.
Lung disease can affect more than your body. It can completely disrupt your daily activities, your family life, your work. At National Jewish Health, we help people and communities breathe easier.

We breathe science, so you can breathe life.
Breath control is something every performer must master. For dancers, good breathing technique can add not only to endurance, but also to fluidity and grace. It can add power to an actor’s speech. Breath control is especially important and challenging for 18-year-old Kendrick Trujillo, who suffers from severe asthma and allergies. Thanks to his multidisciplinary team at National Jewish Health, Trujillo has mastered breath control well enough to pursue dance and theatre studies as he heads off to college.

Trujillo has suffered life-threatening asthma attacks since he was an infant. He recalls the time a wet dog triggered an attack that sent him to the emergency room, sirens blaring. “I felt lightheaded and couldn’t breathe; I started shaking and throwing up. An ambulance took me to the hospital,” Trujillo said. “It was a very, very close call.”

Trujillo came to National Jewish Health for Kids as a young child. Since then, he has been cared for by a whole team of specialists, including an allergist, pulmonologist, psychologist and nurse, who work together to determine the best way to keep their patients healthy and active.

“It is more than just medications that determine a patient’s health,” said Ronina Covar, MD, pediatric pulmonologist and director of the Pediatric Severe Asthma Clinic. “It is also their support system, their lifestyle and the self-awareness to care for themselves.”

“Kendrick is a busy teenager who juggles after-school activities, academics and work,” said pediatric allergist Kanwaljit Brar, MD. “We have been able to incorporate a daily asthma regimen into Kendrick’s busy life. By maintaining control of his asthma, he will be able to continue pursuing his passion for dancing.”

Trujillo recently began his first year of college, studying theatre education. He has taken with him all he learned about mastering his asthma and his breath control. “The secret is staying on top of my meds and exercising my lungs,” Trujillo said. “I train my lungs by staying active. I dance for hours every day and then have theatre rehearsals on top of that.”

Even though Trujillo is away from home, his support system will remain in place, and even grow. National Jewish Health will schedule follow-up appointments when he visits Denver, and help him find a doctor near his university in case of an exacerbation.

“As long as music exists, I will dance,” said Trujillo.
At National Jewish Health, an allergist, a pulmonologist, a psychologist, a nurse and others teamed up with Kendrick Trujillo to keep him dancing.
Crystal Littleben, Miss Navajo Nation, and Peter Nez, project manager and community liaison to the Navajo Nation, pose in front of iconic Window Rock, Arizona, home to the tribe’s administrative center.
Professor of Pediatrics Bruce Bender, PhD, has been awarded an $8.2 million, six-year grant from the National Heart, Lung and Blood Institute to address high rates of asthma in the Navajo Nation. The project will use Dr. Bender’s Asthma Toolkit Program to teach caregivers how to diagnose and manage asthma. It also will involve a program developed by Lynn Gerald, PhD, MSPH, at the University of Arizona, to teach families, teachers and school nurses how to manage asthma.

This is the first large effort to address health disparities in the Navajo Nation. A complex mix of poverty, indoor pollution and a harsh environment combine to produce asthma rates that are two to three times higher than in the general population. Dr. Bender held more than 60 meetings with members of the Navajo Nation to lay the groundwork for the project and to set up advisory committees and partnerships for the program.

“Our overall goal is to build a lasting program that is sustainable for the people of the Navajo Nation,” said Dr. Bender. He is head of the Division of Pediatric Behavioral Health and co-director of the Center for Health Promotion.

The program furthers Dr. Bender’s focus on implementation research, which seeks to translate and disseminate medical and scientific discoveries at academic medical centers to the medical community at large.

“For so many diseases, including asthma, research at academic medical centers has identified excellent ways to treat, prevent and manage disease,” said Dr. Bender. “However, numerous practical, day-to-day obstacles prevent community physicians from incorporating this important knowledge into their practices. We are working hard to identify and overcome those obstacles, so that more people can receive better care based on the best research evidence we have.”
Professor of Medicine Lisa Cicuttto, RN, PhD, and her colleagues are engaging residents from low-income, industrialized communities to collect and interpret air quality data. The research, funded by a three-year grant from the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency, is intended to help residents understand and reduce their exposures to hazardous air pollutants. It also will provide important baseline data for air quality impacts of a major highway expansion and redevelopment project in the area.

The Globeville, Elyria and Swansea neighborhoods of Denver surround a traffic-choked section of Interstates 70 and 25. They also have industrial air pollution, especially particulate matter. Residents have expressed concerns about the health effects of air pollution and the accuracy of existing air pollution data.

Numerous residents will collect air quality data by wearing portable air quality monitors about the size of smart phones for several days during different seasons. The monitors will measure the exposure to air pollutants that residents actually experience, as well as the details of when and where the exposures are high and low. About 15 stationary monitors will collect pollution data throughout the community, primarily at schools and green spaces.

“We are engaging residents to become citizen scientists and help us collect data about air pollution in their neighborhood,” said Cicuttto. “We will also rely on residents to help us find the most effective methods to analyze and present the data. In this way, residents can understand their exposures, take actions to reduce those exposures and be effective advocates for their neighborhoods.”

The project also will gather valuable data to help evaluate the effects of a major highway construction project beginning soon. The project is intended to reduce traffic congestion, noise and air pollution in the area.
Lisa Cicutto, RN, PhD, (right) and researcher Molly McCullough, BS, collect data to help residents in Denver understand and reduce their exposure to hazardous air pollutants.
National Jewish Health Helps Miners

For 15 years, physicians and staff in the Environmental and Occupational Health Sciences Division at National Jewish Health have provided free health screenings for thousands of miners and former miners in underserved communities across Colorado, Wyoming and Arizona. The National Jewish Health team not only discovers previously undetected disease, but also helps patients get appropriate care and obtain disability status and health benefits.

Thanks to two grants awarded in 2017 by the Health Resources and Services Administration, National Jewish Health physicians and staff can continue to provide free screenings to miners at high risk for black lung, silicosis, lung cancer and other diseases. They also screen for other health issues, including heart disease, high blood pressure and sleep apnea. Participants receive chest X-rays, breathing tests, a complete physical exam, health education and recommendations for follow-up care.

“These miners often live in rural communities where expert pulmonologists and advanced diagnostic tools are unavailable,” said Cecile Rose, MD, MPH, professor of medicine and director of the Miners Clinic at National Jewish Health. “We see this not just as a program for early disease detection, but also as a service for rural communities that have been historically underserved.”
“Every week, I see patients suffering the debilitating and sometimes deadly effects of inhaling beryllium particles,” said Lisa Maier, MD, MSPH, chief of Environmental and Occupational Health Sciences at National Jewish Health. For almost three decades, National Jewish Health has been a leader in the research, diagnosis and treatment of lung disease caused by the exposure to the metal beryllium. Faculty and staff have consistently advocated for reduced exposure to beryllium particles in the workplace. Those efforts reached a major milestone in 2017 when the U.S. Occupational Safety and Health Administration (OSHA) reduced permissible exposures to airborne beryllium by 90 percent.

“These new standards better reflect our knowledge about beryllium,” said Dr. Maier. “They will better protect thousands of workers in the United States.”

Beryllium, prized for its combination of strength and light weight, is used in a variety of industries, including aerospace, electronics, energy, telecommunications, medicine and defense. When particles, aerosols or fumes become airborne during machining or otherwise working the material, they can be inhaled into the lungs and cause an inflammatory, scarring disease known as chronic beryllium disease.

Physicians at National Jewish Health see more patients affected by beryllium and perform more diagnostic tests than any other institution in the world. Research at National Jewish Health has contributed to knowledge about beryllium and its effect on people who inhale it.

Dr. Maier and epidemiologist Peggy Mroz, MSPH, testified to OSHA panels considering changes to allowable beryllium exposures. National Jewish Health contributions were mentioned 29 times in the background and rationale for the final standard.

“The team at National Jewish Health has been instrumental in improving our knowledge about the risks posed by inhaled beryllium,” said David Michaels, PhD, former Assistant Secretary of Labor for OSHA, who called Dr. Maier to personally thank and congratulate her when the new standards were finalized. “They deserve tremendous credit for protecting workers from the hazards of beryllium.”
Collaborations

We are bringing our expertise and our unique approach to respiratory care and research to more people through collaborations with leading health care institutions across the nation.
When Kori Tolbert, 38, of Rochester, New York, checked into the Cystic Fibrosis (CF) Unit at National Jewish Health | Saint Joseph Hospital, she found a hospital room completely customized for patients with CF. It had a stationary bicycle, a refrigerator and a guest area. National Jewish Health faculty and staff helped design the rooms at the campus of Saint Joseph Hospital specifically for their CF patients, who have frequent, extended stays in the hospital. National Jewish Health operates the largest adult cystic fibrosis program in the nation and has been a world leader in developing medications and treatment regimens that have dramatically extended the lives of patients. Cystic fibrosis patients fight a never-ending battle against lung infections. As a result, they endure frequent “tune-up” hospitalizations that can last two weeks for intensive antibiotic treatments.

Even before National Jewish Health, Saint Joseph Hospital and its nonprofit parent, SCL Health, officially completed their joint operating agreement in 2013, leaders at Saint Joseph Hospital sought input from National Jewish Health physicians and staff on the rooms for cystic fibrosis patients in its new, state-of-the-art hospital. In consultation with patients, National Jewish Health physicians and staff recommended a number of elements that could benefit patients during their frequent, lengthy stays.

“The team at Saint Joseph have been excellent partners,” said Sara Brayshaw, RN, nurse manager for the Adult Cystic Fibrosis Program. “They incorporated our suggestion for design changes to rooms in the Cystic Fibrosis Unit and have worked closely with us to provide the best care for our patients.”

Cystic fibrosis patients consume high-calorie diets to maintain their weight and strength. Therefore, rooms in the cystic fibrosis unit at National Jewish Health | Saint Joseph Hospital have refrigerators, so patients can have ready access to nutritious food at any time of day or night. The rooms also are larger than most hospital rooms and have a guest seating area that can be converted to a bed for family members to stay.

“Having my husband stay with me in my room was essential, especially that first night when I was adjusting to a new hospital,” Tolbert said. “Having him close was a really great gift.”

Each of the rooms is equipped as needed with an exercise bicycle, yoga mat, exercise ball and other items, so CF patients can get the exercise that helps clear mucus from their lungs and slow the decline in lung function. “Having them here in the room has been awesome,” Tolbert said. “Using the ball helped me open my chest, which helps my breathing. The equipment in my room really helped my body handle being in the hospital.”
National Jewish Health continues to expand its reach and ability to positively impact the health of children and adults throughout the United States and beyond. Over the past several years, a number of key collaborations with leading health care institutions from New York and Philadelphia to Denver and hospitals across the West have been an important component of growth and the extension of the unique model of care practiced at National Jewish Health. In addition to elevating respiratory care for patients around the nation, these collaborations have provided more opportunities for research and training of health professionals.

In 2017, a new collaboration with Jefferson Heath in Philadelphia was announced, expanding the successful Respiratory Institute we began in 2014 with the Icahn School of Medicine at Mount Sinai in New York City.

Mount Sinai — National Jewish Health Respiratory Institute Grows

The Mount Sinai — National Jewish Health Respiratory Institute, led by CEO Charles “Cap” Powell, MD, continued to grow with 18,766 outpatient visits in 2016 and 10,429 during the first six months of 2017. Four new pulmonologists joined the Institute and experts in cardiology, gastroenterology, rheumatology and allergy were integrated into the Institute. This approach allows for more efficient and seamless integration of care for patients and valuable collaboration among caregivers.

We also launched several regular disease-specific video conferences that allow physicians in Denver and New York to share insights and expertise on the most challenging cases of interstitial lung disease, asthma and chronic obstructive pulmonary disease.

National Jewish Health and Mount Sinai physicians jointly delivered a series of professional education events to help physicians in the Northeast learn best practices for diagnosis and management of severe asthma. Research also thrived with a research symposium that highlighted discoveries at both institutions and identified opportunities for future research collaborations.

Collaboration with Jefferson Health Launches Respiratory Institute in Philadelphia

In 2017, National Jewish Health announced a new collaboration with Jefferson Health in Philadelphia to establish the Jane and Leonard Korman Respiratory Institute there. The Institute is enabled in part by the continuing support of the Jane and Leonard Korman Family Foundation.

The Respiratory Institute will provide a deep patient-care experience built on the multidisciplinary, team-based model of care practiced at National Jewish Health, tailored for the unique environment and capabilities of Jefferson Health. The Respiratory Institute also will focus on research, bringing together investigators from both institutions to advance care for complex respiratory diseases. Together, Jefferson Health and National Jewish Health bring an extraordinary level of expertise in addressing complex respiratory illnesses.

“This new relationship and the physicians and researchers who will be working together will help many more patients in the Philadelphia area and throughout the Northeast,” said Michael Salem, MD, president and CEO of National Jewish Health. “We are excited to extend our mission in this way.”

In addition, our work in Philadelphia will be in concert with the work we do with the Mount Sinai – National Jewish Health Respiratory Institute in New York. Together, we will collaborate on research, clinical trials and other programs that will serve patients throughout the Northeast in an unparalleled respiratory network.

Range and Depth Grow
In Work with Saint Joseph Hospital and SCL Health

In 2017, the Joint Operating Agreement between National Jewish Health and Saint Joseph Hospital in Denver and its nonprofit parent SCL Health (SCL), continued to grow in both range and depth. Physicians and staff from both organizations are providing comprehensive, innovative care, from outpatient clinics on the National Jewish Health campus to inpatient care at the state-of-the-art Saint Joseph Hospital.

National Jewish Health physicians lead the intensive care unit based at Saint Joseph Hospital and provide hospitalist care for National Jewish Health patients when they are inpatients. They provide pulmonary consultations for all patients at Saint Joseph Hospital, and in the past year began seeing patients at a second SCL hospital, Platte Valley Medical Center.

We formed integrated leadership teams with physician and staff management to provide greater focus and drive excellence in our cardiology, oncology, general surgery and pulmonology collaborations. Delivering integrated, specialized outpatient and inpatient care to meet the unique needs of cystic fibrosis patients continued to be a major focus. The Adult Cystic Fibrosis Program, the largest of its kind in the country, is based at National Jewish Health and includes a fully integrated inpatient unit at Saint Joseph Hospital.

Both organizations have been recognized for excellence by a variety of organizations, highlighting our focus on quality care. Among other awards, Saint Joseph Hospital earned the prestigious Magnet accreditation for nursing excellence and quality patient care. Given to only seven percent of U.S. hospitals, it is the highest national honor in the nursing field.

Research Expands with University of Colorado School of Medicine

In the past year, National Jewish Health continued and extended a variety of collaborations on research, patient care and education with its long-time academic partner, the University of Colorado School of Medicine and its hospital. Two new multimillion-dollar research programs, one on epigenetics of pulmonary fibrosis awarded to the university and one on severe asthma awarded to National Jewish Health, will rely on collaborations of researchers at both institutions. National Jewish Health Executive Vice President Greg Downey, MD, and Jim J. Reilly Jr., MD, dean of the University of Colorado School of Medicine, have worked closely to make it easier for researchers at both institutions to share resources and core laboratories.

Children Benefit from Rocky Mountain Hospital For Children Collaboration

Our collaborative work with Rocky Mountain Hospital for Children, a part of the HealthONE system, continued to benefit children in the local area and extend the reach of our pediatric program. National Jewish Health provided protocols and staff to support a respiratory care program for children at the hospital. National Jewish Health for Kids physicians provided diagnostic and treatment services on site at the hospital for a variety of diseases, including allergy, asthma, atopic dermatitis and immune deficiencies. Moving forward, that clinic will be based at National Jewish Health with additional focused clinics opening in the upcoming year. National Jewish Health for Kids physicians also provided “on-call” pediatric consultations for emergency and inpatient needs for other HealthONE facilities throughout Colorado.

Tele-ICU Serves More Banner Health Patients

National Jewish Health intensivists provided Tele-ICU services for more acutely ill patients as Banner Health increased the number of intensive care unit beds at 25 hospitals across the West. From an office on the National Jewish Health campus, National Jewish Health intensivists use a suite of electronic resources to monitor seriously ill patients and provide guidance on their care. Banner has found that Tele-ICU technology improves care, saves lives and shortens ICU stays for patients.
Fiscal year 2017 saw further development and expansion of our local and national collaborations. In three short years, our joint ventures with Saint Joseph Hospital and SCL Health, The Icahn School of Medicine at Mount Sinai and our new venture with Jefferson Health, cumulatively have added more than $16 million to our bottom line — $7.4 million in fiscal 2017 alone. In addition, these ventures have improved respiratory care and research around the nation, enabling us to provide better access to more patients across a wider geographical area. They also have strengthened our reputation nationally.

The investment markets rebounded strongly during the year. Combined, our National Jewish Health diversified portfolios gained more than 12.5 percent, resulting in revenues of $11.9 million during the year, compared to a loss of $3.0 million the prior year.

Patient service revenue remained strong as evidenced by an almost 10 percent increase in year-over-year billings. In spite of this growth, net patient service revenue declined 1 percent due to reductions in Medicaid reimbursement. Patient demand remains strong, and National Jewish Health continues to expand services to meet that demand. New clinicians were successfully recruited in pulmonology, oncology, cardiology, rheumatology and pediatrics.

We successfully diversified our grant portfolio with new collaborations with the U.S. Department of Defense and the National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA). We increased revenues from clinical trials and expanded investigator-initiated, privately funded projects. We also recruited new research faculty. These ongoing efforts paid off with a 7 percent increase in research revenues.

Health Initiatives also had a very strong year. We received two new state contracts. In addition, the “Tips from Former Smokers” national media campaign, funded by the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC), drove significant call volume to the Quitline. Operational efficiencies also improved. In total, Health Initiatives revenues increased 30 percent year over year.

Due largely to the increasing cost of pharmaceuticals, new recruitment, the growth of Health Initiatives calls, expanded research grants and general inflation, expenses increased 4 percent year over year, which is consistent with the prior year.

With the support of our loyal donors, fundraising completed another successful year, raising $19.5 million. These funds are crucial for continuing our mission to cure devastating respiratory and related diseases that afflict and kill millions every year. Donations help us recruit the brightest new physicians and scientists, build new facilities, and continue our missions of care, education and research.

Lower than expected bequests and the timing of some potentially substantial gifts, resulted in total philanthropy being lower than in the prior year. For the last 118 years, philanthropy has been the foundation of our mission and our success as the leading respiratory hospital in the world.

*Deceased
In 29 years at National Jewish Health, Erwin Gelfand, MD, developed innovative clinical programs; conducted groundbreaking research; mentored dozens of clinicians and scientists; and transformed National Jewish Health for Kids into a worldwide referral center for asthma, allergy, atopic dermatitis and immunodeficiency. In recognition of those accomplishments during his tenure as chair of the Department of Pediatrics at National Jewish Health, Dr. Gelfand was presented with the President’s Award in 2017.

Recruited from Toronto’s Hospital for Sick Children in 1987, Dr. Gelfand grew our Pediatrics Department into a pre-eminent program by hiring exceptional faculty, and establishing the unique Day Program, Infusion Center, Clinical Research Center, Immunodeficiency Diagnosis and Treatment Program and specialty programs for several allergic and respiratory diseases.

Dr. Gelfand has authored nearly 800 scientific publications. He trained 120 postdoctoral research fellows and 75 clinical fellows. Most of his trainees remain in academic medicine, are widely published and hold leadership positions in the United States, Canada, Israel, Germany, Japan, China, England, France and Korea.

His immunodeficiency and immunology research has been supported for decades by the National Institutes of Health, Environmental Protection Agency, foundations and pharmaceutical companies. He has received numerous immunology awards around the globe, is a member of many professional academies, associations and societies and serves on several editorial boards.

In late 2016, Dr. Gelfand retired as chair of Pediatrics. He continues to see patients and conduct research at National Jewish Health.

Over the course of my career, I’ve been passionate about research that benefits children.

- Pamela Zeitlin, MD, PhD
  Chair of Pediatrics

Pamela Zeitlin, MD, PhD, Takes Reins as Chair of Pediatrics

Nationally renowned pediatric pulmonologist Pamela Zeitlin, MD, PhD, joined National Jewish Health in December 2016 as the chair of the Silverstein Family Department of Pediatrics. She has assumed leadership of the program from pediatric immunologist Erwin Gelfand, MD, who led the department for 29 years and continues to see patients and conduct research.

Dr. Zeitlin received her medical degree and doctorate in cell biology from Yale University. She completed her residency in pediatrics and fellowship in pediatric pulmonology at Johns Hopkins University School of Medicine, where she subsequently served on the faculty for 28 years before coming to National Jewish Health. During her tenure at Johns Hopkins, she built and oversaw many successful pediatric pulmonary, research and faculty education programs. She served as professor of pediatrics and deputy director for the Institute for Clinical and Translational Research. She was also director of the Eudowood Division of Pediatric Respiratory Sciences and co-director of the Pediatric Cystic Fibrosis Clinical Center.

As chair of the Department of Pediatrics, Dr. Zeitlin oversees the pediatric clinical and research programs at National Jewish Health. In addition to maintaining and building on existing programs, Dr. Zeitlin has begun work with colleagues at National Jewish Health and Saint Joseph Hospital on new programs for pediatric patients who struggle with breathing, swallowing or related gastrointestinal problems, in addition to respiratory conditions.

“Over the course of my career, I’ve been passionate about research that benefits children. I’m excited to be joining an organization, and a group of phenomenal physicians and researchers, who share that same passion,” said Dr. Zeitlin. “I look forward to working within the community to expand the reach of National Jewish Health for Kids in helping those suffering from chronic lung diseases.”

Beaux Arts Ball

More than 1,200 guests came together Saturday, Feb. 25, 2017, for the 20th Anniversary Beaux Arts Freedom Ball. The annual black-tie event raised $2.2 million for National Jewish Health, including $700,000 to support care and research for those suffering with food allergies. This year featured the transformation of Wings Over the Rockies Air and Space Museum into the streets of 1770s America, inspired by “Hamilton: An American Musical.”

Carrie and John Morgridge Receive Arthur B. Lorber Award

In 2017, National Jewish Health presented Carrie and John Morgridge with the Arthur B. Lorber Award for Distinguished Service, the hospital’s highest honor. The Arthur B. Lorber Award recognizes individuals whose leadership has affected the reputation, service, science or mission of National Jewish Health. The Morgridges’ generosity has left an indelible mark on the National Jewish Health campus.

John and Carrie are longtime supporters of the Beaux Arts Ball, the largest local fundraising event for National Jewish Health. Their Morgridge Family Foundation has been the presenting sponsor of the Beaux Arts Ball since 2010. The Morgridges were honored as Beaux Arts Ball grand marshals in 2011.

The support of Carrie and John Morgridge and the Morgridge Family Foundation has improved both health care and education at National Jewish Health. In appreciation of a significant gift in 2013, National Jewish Health established the Morgridge Educational Campus, which includes the Morgridge Academy for chronically ill children and the Morgridge Fellowship Program.

“I want to thank all of the teachers at Morgridge Academy,” Carrie said. “And I want to thank National Jewish Health, because you are providing access to great health care and never turning anyone away for not being able to pay.”

In addition to their generous contributions to advance the work of National Jewish Health, the Morgridges have affected lives across Denver and the nation. They founded the Student Support Foundation and created mindSpark Learning, a recently established destination in Denver for innovative professional development for educators. The Morgridge Family Foundation has also supported major projects at the University of Denver, Denver Museum of Nature and Science, Mile High United Way, Denver Art Museum and Catholic Charities of Fort Worth.
Legacies of Hope

The Legacies of Hope is a society established to recognize all those supporters who have included National Jewish Health in their estate and financial plans, including a will, charitable gift annuity, trust or insurance policy. These gifts will live on for generations, helping to ensure that National Jewish Health will continue its mission.

The following names are new Legacies of Hope members who added National Jewish Health to their estate plans between July 1, 2016, and June 30, 2017.

Companies Raise Funds and Awareness for National Jewish Health

Keith Herbert was so grateful for the care his father received at National Jewish Health that he created a special “We Breathe Hope” blend of coffee at ink! Coffee, the company he leads in Denver. In addition, Herbert is donating 20 percent of all sales of the blend to Morgridge Academy, the free school for chronically ill children on the National Jewish Health main campus. “My father received outstanding care at National Jewish Health,” said Herbert. “We are proud to give back in this way.”

Herbert’s contribution is one of several collaborations that companies in Denver have forged to support National Jewish Health. Antoine du Chez, Denver’s top salon and spa, and True Food Kitchen are also donating a portion of their sales to National Jewish Health. The collaborations raise both funds and awareness for National Jewish Health. For collaborating businesses, they provide a unique giving opportunity, attract a growing segment of consumers who value corporate social responsibility and strengthen employee pride and dedication.

Denver restaurateur Troy Guard launched the “Eat. Drink. Donate.” campaign at his family of restaurants to raise funds and awareness for Morgridge Academy. To recognize Chef Troy’s generosity, Morgridge Academy students dedicated the school’s garden in his name. The Guard Garden now serves as an outdoor extension of the classroom and provides students and their families with access to fresh produce and hands-on learning about healthy food and growing bodies.

Florida Philanthropist Reaches Million-Dollar Milestone

Louise B. Scheril reached an amazing milestone this year. The 93-year-old Pembroke Pines, Florida, resident surpassed $1 million in total gifts to National Jewish Health. Scheril made her first donation — a $25 gift — to National Jewish Health in the early 1950s. She was inspired to give because a friend and colleague traveled from New York to the Denver-based hospital for treatment for tuberculosis.

“They helped get her life back together,” Scheril recalled. “She was a dear, sweet woman, and she was able to get married and have a family. That kind of moved me.”

Scheril donated as much as $25 off and on for nearly 50 years, then began making larger gifts after her beloved husband, Paul, passed away 11 years ago. This year, Scheril funded her 13th charitable gift annuity for National Jewish Health. Charitable gift annuities provide support to the hospital and fixed payments back to the donor for the rest of his or her life.

“You’re doing such wonderful work,” Scheril said of National Jewish Health. “I had a sweet, wonderful husband who planned very well for me. Everything I’ve given is in loving memory of him.”

Thomas W. Gamel Cancer Treatment Center Honors Generous Philanthropist

National Jewish Health is blessed with supporters around the world whose appreciation for and commitment to our mission inspires them to give generously to support our research and treatment programs.

Thomas Gamel was one of those donors. Gamel was known in the Denver community for his generosity, particularly to those individuals or causes with great potential for a positive outcome. He saw that potential in National Jewish Health. Before he passed away from lung cancer in 2015, Gamel and his family gave National Jewish Health a significant gift that will have a positive impact on lung cancer patients for generations to come. In honor of Gamel's support, National Jewish Health has named the Thomas W. Gamel Cancer Treatment Center.

“I have given a lot of money over my lifetime to many great causes and have never put my name on a facility before,” wrote Gamel in a letter accompanying the gift. “There are two reasons that I am doing it now. First, I would like my grandchildren and their children to see the Cancer Treatment Center and learn that our family values include the importance of giving back to the community that we live in. Second, National Jewish Health is the premier respiratory hospital in the world, and I am very proud to be associated with you and your mission.”
National Jewish Health is grateful for the generous contributions from individuals, corporations and foundations across the country and around the world. The following is a list of those who made gifts of $500 or more in fiscal year 2017.

National Jewish Health is the leading respiratory hospital in the nation. Founded 118 years ago as a nonprofit hospital, National Jewish Health today is the only facility in the world dedicated exclusively to groundbreaking medical research and treatment of patients with respiratory, cardiac, immune and related disorders. Patients and families come to National Jewish Health from around the world to receive cutting-edge, comprehensive, coordinated care.
National Jewish Health has been named the #1 hospital in the nation for respiratory care by U.S. News & World Report in its 2017-18 Best Hospital rankings. This is the 16th year National Jewish Health has been in the #1 spot on that list.

In the U.S. News & World Report award category for “Best Hospitals for Common Care,” our COPD (chronic obstructive pulmonary disease) care and our lung cancer programs were rated “high performing,” the highest rating available.
