Two trends continue to transform the field of medicine at an accelerating pace. First, the explosion of scientific knowledge is enabling physicians to practice personalized medicine — delivering the right treatment to the right person at the right time. Second, economic, social and legislative forces are reshaping the delivery of health care in the United States. The future of medicine demands agility and innovation to adapt and thrive in this rapidly changing environment.

At National Jewish Health, we are embracing the future. New partners, new insights and innovative therapies are positioning National Jewish Health to continue its leadership role in medicine and science.

In this past year, we have formed several collaborations and relationships that will extend and enhance our ability to provide unparalleled care for respiratory, cardiac, immune and related diseases, while also improving patient outcomes and managing costs.

In June, we completed our joint operating agreement with Saint Joseph Hospital in Denver and its parent, SCL Health. Our faculty and staff have been working with our colleagues at Saint Joseph to transform the way care is delivered within our organizations — both inpatient and outpatient. Beginning in December 2014, National Jewish Health patients will have access to a new, state-of-the-art 360-bed hospital jointly operated by National Jewish Health and Saint Joseph Hospital.

In December 2013, we extended our geographic reach through an agreement with the Icahn School of Medicine at Mount Sinai in New York City to jointly form the Mount Sinai – National Jewish Health Respiratory Institute at Mount Sinai Hospital in New York City.

Earlier this year, National Jewish Health intensive care specialists began providing remote, electronic intensive care services for 21 Banner Health hospitals across the West. We plan to extend our pediatric reach in the coming year.

Our agreements with Saint Joseph, SCL Health and Mount Sinai will also strengthen our research efforts through collaborations with those institutions. During the past year, we further strengthened our research enterprise and completed an in-depth strategic review that led to the creation of a new Department of Biomedical Research and Research Advisory Committee.

Our research into lung injury and repair, the interactions of medications for cystic fibrosis and the intricate details of immune activation help us identify new targets for life-saving therapy. We continue to develop new therapies to improve care, from first-ever treatments for idiopathic pulmonary fibrosis to personalized asthma care, and to work toward potential cures for food allergies. These are only a few of the stories that exemplify the leadership and accomplishments that National Jewish Health faculty and staff make happen every day.

At National Jewish Health, we are embracing the future of medicine.

Embracing Healthy Skin

Jaxon Anderson was stuck in a cycle of painful dry, cracked skin and powerful steroid use. Since birth, Jaxon has suffered continuous flare-ups of his atopic dermatitis, which leave him scratching, bleeding and in pain. Recently, topical steroids were no longer working to clear his skin. That’s when Jaxon and his family came to National Jewish Health.

For decades National Jewish Health has been treating atopic dermatitis patients with a therapy known as wet wrap or soak-and-seal. Patients soak in a warm bath for about 15 minutes, then cover themselves with topical medications and moisture-trapping creams or ointments. Then they spend about two hours dressed in one layer of damp clothing and another layer of dry clothing. The technique promotes healing by rehydrating atopic dermatitis patients’ skin.

This year, research results confirmed the benefit of wet wrap therapy for atopic dermatitis. Children who underwent wet wrap therapy saw a 71 percent reduction in symptoms. They were able to maintain healthy skin a month after returning home, while also reducing their use of steroids. After two weeks of intensive, interdisciplinary care at National Jewish Health, including wet wrap therapy, Jaxon’s skin is better than it has been in years, and his family has a new technique they can use to help keep it that way.
Jaxon Anderson takes a wagon ride while receiving wet wrap therapy for atopic dermatitis, which helps hydrate and heal his skin.
New Hope for Pulmonary Fibrosis Patients

Ed Duncan shouldn’t be alive. More than 10 years ago, he was diagnosed with idiopathic pulmonary fibrosis (IPF), a deadly lung disease that kills about 40,000 Americans each year. “My doctor at National Jewish Health told me that half of IPF patients die within five years,” Ed said. “When I asked him what happened to the other half, he said they die within 10 years.” At that moment, Ed added another goal to his bucket list: living 10 more years. He also vowed to celebrate his 50th wedding anniversary, nine years away.

Those resolutions seemed ambitious, given that there were no approved medications for IPF. However, at National Jewish Health, Ed was enrolled in a clinical trial of the experimental medication pirfenidone. Six years later, in the spring of 2014, National Jewish Health faculty and their colleagues around the nation reported that pirfenidone and another medication, nintedanib, had slowed the rapid loss of lung function among IPF patients and may extend survival. Both medications were approved in October 2014 by the U.S. Food and Drug Administration.

In early 2014, pulmonologist Gregory Cosgrove, MD, below, was named medical director of the Pulmonary Fibrosis Foundation, an organization that has played a vital role in rallying patients, physicians and politicians around the search for a cure.

While the treatments don’t reverse the disease, they represent a major step forward, said Kevin K. Brown, MD, Vice Chair of Medicine at National Jewish Health and co-author of one of the trials.

This important step forward could not have happened without the expertise and dedication of physicians and researchers at National Jewish Health, who see more IPF patients than almost any other medical group. National Jewish Health houses unparalleled clinical data and tissue samples collected for decades from patients treated here.

Building on this wealth of experience and information, physicians and researchers at National Jewish Health have described who gets the disease, its natural progression and the basic mechanisms underlying its relentless scarring. They have helped guide the research agenda and raised awareness of the disease. IPF patients at National Jewish Health participate in clinical trials of most new treatments and medications.

In October 2013, Ed and his wife celebrated their 50th wedding anniversary. In June 2014, he checked living 10 more years off his bucket list.
The Future of Food Allergy Treatments

There is no cure for food allergies. The only thing allergic patients can do is avoid the allergenic food and be prepared to respond to any accidental exposure. In severe cases, that can mean injecting epinephrine and going quickly to an emergency room.

National Jewish Health faculty and their colleagues in the Consortium of Food Allergy Research are evaluating a variety of methods aimed at desensitizing patients to allergenic foods, a strategy known as immunotherapy.

For more than a century, physicians have used immunotherapy to desensitize patients to pollen and other environmental allergies. Historically, the majority of patients who receive monthly shots containing the allergen develop tolerance and no longer react to those substances. However, given the extreme allergic response that food allergies can provoke, shots are not considered a safe method of immunotherapy.

Today, researchers at National Jewish Health are evaluating alternative strategies for peanut and egg allergies. For peanut allergy, they are assessing a fabric patch, similar to a nicotine patch, laced with peanut protein, which is absorbed through the skin. In another study, they are feeding small amounts of baked egg to patients. The baking process alters the allergenic protein, which may make it less likely to provoke a severe response while still helping to desensitize patients.

“Our hope is that these trials will help us develop the first active and preventive food allergy treatment, so patients no longer have to live in fear of their food allergies,” said Donald Leung, MD, PhD, Chief of Pediatric Allergy and Clinical Immunology at National Jewish Health.
Study nurse Susan Leung is guiding 5-year-old Keely Graff through a clinical trial of immunotherapy for peanut allergy.

Asthma Care Becoming Personalized

Asthma is a complex disease with many different forms. In fact, some physicians think it is really several different disorders that share similar symptoms but have different causes and respond to different therapies. National Jewish Health physicians and researchers are working to personalize asthma care so that the right medicine is given to the right patient at the right time.

Michael Wechsler, MD, Director of the Asthma Program at National Jewish Health, is leading a national study to find more effective asthma treatments for African Americans such as Wayne Butler.
New Patent Helps Identify the Right Medication

National Jewish Health physician scientists Nathan Rabinovitch, MD, and Erwin Gelfand, MD, received a patent in 2014 for a new way to personalize asthma care. About a quarter of asthma patients respond better to medications known as leukotriene modifiers, while the majority respond better to inhaled corticosteroids. By measuring the relative levels in patients of two biomarkers — leukotrienes and eosinophils — Drs. Rabinovitch and Gelfand can identify patients likely to respond to leukotriene modifiers. That information can ensure that asthma patients receive effective medications when they need them.

Improving Asthma Therapy for African Americans

African Americans suffer worse asthma than most other groups. They have more urgent care visits and hospitalizations for asthma, as well as higher death rates. Researchers around the country, led by Michael E. Wechsler, MD, Director of the Asthma Program at National Jewish Health, have launched a large, multi-center study to determine the best therapy for uncontrolled asthma in African Americans. The Best African American Response to Asthma Drugs (BARD) study, funded by the National Heart, Lung, and Blood Institute, compares several combinations of medications and dosing regimens to find the one most likely to help African American patients.

“While national asthma guidelines provide recommendations for all patients with asthma, the guidelines were based on studies that included relatively few African Americans,” said Dr. Wechsler. “This study will seek to narrow the disparity in asthma outcomes by customizing medical treatment for the African American population.”
Rheumatologist Aryeh Fischer, MD, looked beyond Laurie Cahill’s failing lungs to accurately diagnose her disease so she could once again enjoy life with husband, Jeff, and their dog.
Laurie Cahill could hardly believe Aryeh Fischer, MD, Chief of Rheumatology at National Jewish Health, when he told her what had caused her breathing problems. After two weeks in a hospital with rapidly declining lung function and no definitive diagnosis or treatment, Laurie had come to National Jewish Health. Very quickly, Dr. Fischer recognized that Laurie had polymyositis, an autoimmune rheumatic disease more commonly associated with muscle inflammation than with lung disease. Dr. Fischer’s diagnosis and subsequent treatment with an immune suppressant improved Laurie’s lung function, and almost certainly saved her life.

Dr. Fischer’s diagnosis and subsequent treatment with an immune suppressant improved Laurie’s lung function, and almost certainly saved her life.

Laurie’s case illustrates a point Dr. Fischer has been making in numerous academic publications and at professional conferences around the country. Rheumatic diseases are too often associated with specific parts of the body — rheumatoid arthritis with joint disease, scleroderma with skin and polymyositis with muscle inflammation, for instance. These diseases, however, are not single organ problems, according to Dr. Fischer. In reality, they are systemic autoimmune diseases that can afflict several organs, especially the lungs. Laurie’s polymyositis manifesting most strongly in the lungs is a perfect example.

Dr. Fischer says that patients with rheumatic diseases often benefit from a multi-disciplinary evaluation and management. This approach takes a team effort, a hallmark of care at National Jewish Health. A multi-disciplinary team comprehensively evaluates patients, looking not at just one organ or system, but at the whole person. By recognizing that breathing difficulties may actually be caused by rheumatic diseases such as rheumatoid arthritis or scleroderma, they recognize and treat rheumatic diseases that others may miss. As Dr. Fischer emphasizes a more comprehensive approach to patients, he and his colleagues may be redefining rheumatology.
By studying the normal process of lung injury and repair, Elizabeth Redente, PhD (left), and Rachel Zemans, MD, seek to learn what causes lung disease and how to prevent it.
Lung Disease — When Repair Goes Awry

An adult can easily take 20,000 breaths a day, inhaling everything from pollen and dust to bacteria, viruses and environmental and industrial pollutants. These inhaled contaminants frequently injure the lungs, but a remarkable repair process renews the lungs almost daily. When the repair process goes awry, lung disease — from asthma to pulmonary fibrosis — can be the consequence.

Many researchers at National Jewish Health are focused on better understanding what happens when the lungs are injured and how they repair themselves. This work can offer new insights into disease and potential targets for treatment. Two young researchers, Elizabeth Redente, PhD, and Rachel Zemans, MD, were chosen in June 2014 to present their latest research on lung injury and repair at the Thomas L. Petty Aspen Lung Conference, an elite gathering of thought leaders in respiratory medicine and science.

Inflammation May Not Be So Bad After All

Fibrotic lung diseases occur when the lung continues producing scar tissue long after it is needed for normal wound repair. For years, physicians and scientists thought that inflammation led directly to pathological scarring, or fibrosis, of the lungs. Anti-inflammatory treatments, however, provided no significant benefit for patients. Dr. Redente and her colleagues discovered, somewhat surprisingly, that a pro-inflammatory molecule, known as TNF-alpha, can help remove scar tissue and get healing back on track.

Repairing and Restoring the Lung

Epithelial cells in the lungs’ alveoli have a unique job. They not only must form a tight seal to hold water inside the body, but also need to be very thin so that gases can diffuse through them, allowing oxygen to enter the body and carbon dioxide to leave it. When that thin layer of cells is damaged by acute infection or toxic chemicals, water pours into the lungs, essentially drowning victims. Recovery depends on rapid replacement of those damaged cells. Dr. Zemans is deciphering the complex combination of molecular signals, cell division and shape change that allow this to happen. What she learns could be used to accelerate lung repair after severe injury.
How the Immune System Distinguishes Friend from Foe

Immunologist John Kappler, PhD, has spent most of his long and productive career studying the minute molecular and cellular interactions that allow the immune system to distinguish friend from foe. He and his many collaborators have discovered how the immune system recognizes pathogens, sounds the alarm and launches an immune response.

For several years, Dr. Kappler and his colleagues Shaodong Dai, PhD, at National Jewish Health, and Andrew Fontenot, MD, at the University of Colorado School of Medicine, have looked at how those interactions play out in a chronic lung disease caused by the industrial metal beryllium. They discovered how a tiny beryllium ion lodges itself deep within the immune system’s sensors. By ever so slightly shifting a molecule here and changing an electric charge there, beryllium causes the immune system to launch an inappropriate, sometimes fatal, attack against its own lungs. They published their findings in the influential journal Cell in July 2014.

“This response resembles allergic hypersensitivity in that a metal ion causes an allergic reaction,” said Dr. Kappler. “But it also resembles autoimmunity in that the immune system is mounting an attack against its own body. It is a newly discovered form of immune response, and may lead to new therapeutic strategies to treat and prevent the disease.”

Research Ranges from Bench to Bedside

At National Jewish Health, research efforts span the full spectrum, from investigation at the laboratory bench of basic biological functions to bedside evaluations of clinical outcomes. Two recent research findings demonstrate the breadth and impact of research at National Jewish Health.
For Cystic Fibrosis, Two Medications May Not Be Better Than One

Patients with cystic fibrosis (CF) are living longer than ever thanks in large part to new medications and therapies. Today, CF patients are often given several antibiotics simultaneously to aggressively fight bacterial infections that can damage their lungs.

In 2014, pulmonologists Dave Nichols, MD, and Jerry Nick, MD, published research showing that two of the most popular antibiotics in the CF arsenal — tobramycin and azithromycin — may actually interfere with each other and cause patients’ lung function to decline when used at the same time. The research team is conducting additional studies to confirm their findings, but at National Jewish Health they are already watching for any negative effects from using the two antibiotics together, and adjusting treatment if problems are identified.
E-Cigarettes Have Taken Us Back 50 Years

In late 2013, e-cigarettes burst onto the scene with seductive advertisements positioning these nicotine-delivery devices as a safe alternative to tobacco. David Tinkelman, MD, and Amy Lukowski, PsyD, serve respectively as the medical and clinical directors of the tobacco-cessation Quitline, which National Jewish Health operates for 12 states. They argued that too little is known about e-cigarettes and their use to determine whether they help people quit tobacco, or introduce non-smokers to the smoking habit. Further, Drs. Tinkelman and Lukowski pointed out the serious damaging effects that nicotine can have on the developing brains of children and young adults. They called for the U.S. Food and Drug Administration to set a minimum age for purchase of e-cigarettes; to regulate marketing, especially to youth; to establish standards for nicotine doses and additives in e-cigarettes; and to promote additional research into both the negative and positive aspects of e-cigarettes.

Take Your Medicine — An Unrecognized Opportunity to Improve Health, Reduce Costs

Bruce Bender, PhD, Head of Pediatric Behavioral Health, highlighted an unrecognized driver of illness and health care costs: people not taking their medicine. On average, about half of patients take their medications as prescribed. When asthma patients, transplant recipients and heart attack victims fail to take their medications, they suffer relapses that send them to the hospital and can disable or even kill them. Dr. Bender called for broader recognition of the problem and a sustained effort to assure that people use life-saving medications available to them.
Amy Lukowski, PsyD, and David Tinkelman, MD, have called for tighter regulation of e-cigarettes.

Bruce Bender, PhD, used text messages to increase teenagers’ regular use of asthma medications.
New Collaborations

With a dramatically changing health care landscape, hospitals and providers are seeking new ways to improve care for patients while managing costs and continuing to invest in research and education — all important keys to the future. Recognizing these dynamics, National Jewish Health has continued to collaborate and develop new ways to extend care.

New Hospital Extends Care

The ability to treat patients along the full continuum of care is a critical part of the ultimate patient experience and a strategic goal for National Jewish Health. Finding the right partner for inpatient care ultimately led National Jewish Health to Saint Joseph Hospital and its nonprofit parent, SCL Health. In June 2014, the three organizations completed a joint operating agreement to collaboratively provide inpatient and outpatient care in Denver. The agreement will be further realized when Saint Joseph Hospital opens a 360-bed, $623 million, state-of-the-art hospital in December 2014.

This innovative relationship brings together two of the leading health care providers in Denver. Their complementary strengths, similar missions and dedication to excellence will improve patient-centered care and bring value to health care delivery. Saint Joseph Hospital is the largest non profit teaching hospital in Denver.

Each organization will retain its own assets, employees and operations outside clinical care. National Jewish Health physicians will continue to see patients at the main National Jewish Health campus and 25 other locations throughout Colorado. Inpatients will be referred to the new hospital, a few minutes away, where doctors from both teams help deliver fully coordinated care. National Jewish Health will maintain its intense focus on research and education.
Two Great Institutions Join Forces in New York

National Jewish Health is coming to New York City through another new relationship. National Jewish Health and the Icahn School of Medicine at Mount Sinai announced an agreement to create a new Respiratory Institute on the Icahn School of Medicine campus in New York City. The Icahn School of Medicine is ranked among the top medical schools in the United States and is the education and research hub for the entire Mount Sinai Health System. National Jewish Health is the leading respiratory hospital in the nation, with a global reach in research.

The Mount Sinai – National Jewish Health Respiratory Institute will provide the best care anywhere for respiratory and related diseases and distinguish respiratory care in the New York region. Additionally, the partnership will focus on conducting innovative research and expanding the teaching programs of the Icahn School of Medicine and National Jewish Health. The Respiratory Institute is scheduled to open in early 2015.

“By combining the expertise at both institutions, we will create a world-class Respiratory Institute that will advance respiratory health around the nation.”

Intensive Care Reaches Patients Across the West

From a high-tech command center filled with cameras and computer monitors, Sherstin Lommatzsch, MD, guides treatment for seriously ill patients across the Western United States. She is able to monitor patients in their rooms and direct treatment in real-time interactions with physicians, nurses and family members.

National Jewish Health now provides electronic intensive care services for 21 Banner Health hospitals. Through this agreement, these hospitals are able to utilize National Jewish Health expertise in intensive care remotely. National Jewish Health intensivists already provide in-person intensive care 24 hours a day at two hospitals in Denver. Dr. Lommatzsch and the others who staff the Tele-ICU have access to patients’ electronic health records, vital signs, high-end video links, and two-way communications. Banner has found that Tele-ICU technology improves care, saves lives and shortens ICU stays for patients.
Fiscal year 2014 was one of tremendous opportunity and development for National Jewish Health. We signed a joint operating agreement with Saint Joseph Hospital and SCL Health for our Colorado-based clinical programs. This arrangement enables us to provide inpatient care in a new, jointly managed hospital that will open in December 2014. Providing the ultimate patient experience along the full continuum of care, from outpatient to inpatient, is a signal tenet of our 10-year strategic plan. This agreement will allow us to achieve this goal much sooner than anticipated.

We also closed an agreement to create a joint Respiratory Institute with the Icahn School of Medicine at Mount Sinai in New York City, which will enable us to impact the lives of many more patients who cannot travel to Denver. Both ventures are expected to add significantly to our future financial success.

Patient revenues grew 7.3 percent during the year. We acquired two substantial oncology and hematology practices as complements to our lung cancer strategy. National Jewish Health physicians also began providing nightly Tele-Intensive Care Unit services for 21 additional hospitals across five western United States. On a challenging note, in January, Medicare began denying payment for many laboratory services done on the same day as a physician visit. This hit National Jewish Health harder than many providers because of the intensive work-ups that we perform in a short time for our unique tertiary and quaternary referral patients from around the United States. In spite of this, net patient revenue grew by $8.6 million.

Thanks to our loyal donor base, we raised $30 million for the second year in a row. The ongoing success of our fundraising efforts will enable us to continue expanding the reach of our clinical and research programs.

Research funding across the country continues to be negatively impacted by the flat National Institutes of Health budget. National Jewish Health scientists continue to pursue new funding sources. Non-federal funding increased more than 20 percent during the year. Total grant funding remained flat for the year.

Expenses increased approximately 5 percent during the year. The majority of the increase is attributable to the significant legal and other costs incurred to close our arrangements with Saint Joseph Hospital and its parent SCL Health, and the Icahn School of Medicine at Mount Sinai, and to the expenses related to the acquisition and operation of the new oncology and hematology practices.

National Jewish Health investments benefited from strong financial markets. More than $17 million in investment gains were recorded. Total net assets increased $11.6 million for the year.

We continue to execute our strategic plan, which will enhance our ongoing financial performance. Through new ventures and expansion of clinical programs, investments in our research enterprise and our continued fundraising success, National Jewish Health will achieve another 115 years of programmatic and financial success on behalf of the patients we serve.

The 2014 Beaux Arts Ball took guests back to the opulent 1920s on New York’s Long Island. A Leonardo DiCaprio (as Jay Gatsby) look-alike welcomed guests to the party. The entertainment featured two aerialists who twirled on lengths of silk high above the dining room, which was filled with white feathers, flowers and crystals. Throughout the evening, singers and a full orchestra performed 1920s songs for professional dancers. Later, the band Party Crashers set the beat for guests who packed the dance floor.
Leaders in the real estate and construction industries honored prominent New Yorkers Klara and Larry Silverstein at “A Winter’s Evening” Dinner Dance on Saturday, December 14, 2013. The 44th annual gala raised $2.9 million to benefit National Jewish Health. The event also established The Wendy Siegel Fund for Leukemia and Cancer Research in honor of the event’s Executive Chair since 1984, Wendy Siegel, and The Klara and Larry Silverstein Fund for Pediatric Asthma and Allergy Research and Treatment.
