MAY 31, 2018

DENVER — Julian Garza and Clementina Garza, along with Linda H. and James M. Parker, received the National Jewish Health Spirit of Achievement Award at the 36th Anniversary Spirit of Achievement Award Dinner on May 10, 2018, at Hotel Albuquerque at Old Town. The dinner committee, led by Sherman McCorkle, and more than 200 attendees raised over $50,000 to benefit care and research at National Jewish Health.

The funds raised at the dinner support care and research conducted at National Jewish Health. In 2017, nearly 400 New Mexicans received treatment at the hospital in Denver, with 95 of those people being from Albuquerque. Countless more benefited from the groundbreaking research conducted in the areas of respiratory, cardiac, immune and related diseases. Linda Parker spoke about how asthma research saved the life of her husband, James.

“Imagine waking up at 4 a.m. to the frightening, labored breathing sounds of your spouse,” Linda said. “Once we arrived at the hospital, Jim went into a laryngeal spasm preventing the insertion of the ventilation tube. The ER physicians worked a miracle, and not too long after this hospitalization he entered a research project to desensitize his allergy to ibuprofen which had caused the attack. He has not had an asthma attack since the trial. I have seen firsthand what research dollars can do.”

Much of the research and clinical trials conducted at National Jewish Health provide doctors across the world with new groundbreaking treatment options. National Jewish Health Associate Professor and Pulmonologist Anthony N. Gerber, MD, PhD, spoke about the latest in respiratory care, and shared that 10 of New Mexico’s own physicians completed fellowships at National Jewish Health. Committee member Debbie Johnson served as emcee and presented the Spirit of Achievement Award to each of the four honorees.

“We were delighted to be recognized by a renowned and world-class institution like National Jewish Health,” said Julian Garza.

Julian Garza, Clementina Garza and James M. and Linda H. Parker were all honored for their personal, business and civic achievements and what they have given back to the community of Albuquerque. The four of them have built a legacy of contributing their time, talents and resources in all areas of life.

James M. Parker is a top attorney in New Mexico and his wife Linda H. Parker founded several companies before becoming a leader in the Albuquerque nonprofit community. Julian Garza and Clementina Garza co-own and operate 12 McDonald’s restaurants in the Albuquerque metro area and northern New Mexico. Read their full bios.

Colleagues and friends of committee member Jennifer Riordan supported the event in her honor. Riordan tragically lost her life less than a month before the event. The committee led a moment of silence for her and her family.
