

Lukowski Named to North American Quitline Consortium Board of Directors

AUGUST 13, 2012

DENVER — Amy V. Lukowski, PsyD, clinical director of health initiatives programs at National Jewish Health, has been elected to the North American Quitline Consortium (NAQC) board of directors. The NAQC is an international, non-profit membership organization that seeks to promote evidence-based quitline services across communities in North America.

“I am very excited to be part of the leading organization that supports tobacco cessation quitline services to individuals dependent on tobacco in North America,” said Dr. Lukowski. “I look forward to serving NAQC in continuing their mission to maximize the access, use, and effectiveness of quitlines.”

Quitlines are telephone-based tobacco-cessation services that help tobacco users quit. Services offered by quitlines include coaching and counseling, referrals, mailed materials, training to healthcare providers, Web-based services and, in some instances, free medications, such as nicotine replacement therapy (NRT).

Research has shown that quitlines are highly effective in helping tobacco users quit. Due to their effectiveness and ability to reach and serve tobacco users, regardless of location, quitlines have spread quickly across North America.

Dr. Lukowski also is an assistant professor of medicine at National Jewish Health, a licensed psychologist, a tobacco treatment specialist (TTS) and a MINT (motivational interviewing network of trainers) trainer.

Currently, she is responsible for the clinical leadership, staff training, and the clinical quality assurance and quality improvement programs for the National Jewish Health Quitlines. National Jewish Health currently operates quitlines for ten states, numerous health care plans and private employers.
