DENVER, CO — Jeffrey J. McLane, president of Bank of America Business Capital at Bank of America Merrill Lynch, received the National Jewish Health Humanitarian Award at the 38th Annual Financial Industries Dinner on Thursday, March 12, 2015, at the New York Hilton. More than 800 event attendees, who included the most influential leaders from New York's financial industries, helped raise more than $638,000 for National Jewish Health, the leading respiratory hospital in the nation.

"I am proud that the asset-based lending and financial services industries have supported National Jewish Health for 38 years strong. My wife and I were so impressed by the team of doctors and professionals who we met at National Jewish Health," McLane said "It's an honor to support this great organization and to be inspired by its mission and values of helping other people."

McLane received the National Jewish Health Humanitarian Award, which recognizes individuals who have made significant civic and charitable contributions and are leaders in their communities and industry.

McLane has been with Bank of America and its predecessor institutions for 18 years. McLane holds Series 7, 24 and 63 securities licenses. He earned a bachelor's degree from Babson College, where he remains involved.

Dinner Chair Joseph Powers, senior vice president/marketing manager at Bank of America Business Capital, noted the "tremendous turnout from New York, Atlanta, Boston, California, Charlotte, Chicago, Texas, Canada and the U.K."

The leadership of the Financial Industries Dinner reflects New York's legacy of broad support for the Denver-based institution. In addition to Powers, event leaders included Honorary Chair and last year's honoree William D. Brewer, Winston & Strawn LLP, and National Jewish Health Trustees Robert Arth, Philip Bleser, Barry Kastner, William Kosis, Brian MacConnell, Lawrence Marsiello, Warren Mino, Joseph Nemia, Joseph Pollicino, Jr., Steven Seif, Harry Steinmetz, Andrew Tananbaum, Carl Toriello, Terrence Ullrich and newly inducted Trustee Craig Stillwagon.
